Introduction

HIV/AIDS and Women Who Have Sex With Women

Materials in this search focus on the HIV/AIDS epidemic as it relates to women who have sex with women; this includes those women who self-identify as lesbian or bisexual, as well as other women who have sex with women, but who do not identify as lesbian or bisexual. The latter populations may include, but are not limited to, sex workers and incarcerated women.

In order to obtain general information on the HIV/AIDS epidemic and women's issues, you may want to order HIV/AIDS and Women, another title in the CDC National AIDS Clearinghouse Standard Search Series.

This database search is drawn from the CDC National AIDS Clearinghouse's Educational Materials Database. The Educational Materials Database is a unique collection of information about hard-to-find educational materials on HIV and AIDS.

It includes more than 15,000 descriptions of brochures, directories, manuals, books, posters, reports, studies, teaching guides, sound recordings, videotapes, and other prevention materials. It includes materials for a variety of audiences as well as items that focus on different aspects of HIV infection.

The information in this database search is organized by format; e.g. brochures, posters, and videorecordings. Within each format type, the entries are sorted by year, with the most recent items listed first, and then alphabetically by title. To order a copy of an item listed in the database search, check the Availability section of the entry. Some items are available from the Clearinghouse's Document Delivery service or Publications Distribution service, and all are available directly from the designated vendors. The enclosed order form is for Clearinghouse materials only.

The Standard Search Series

The Clearinghouse offers the Standard Search Series to provide you with up-to-date information on a variety of key HIV/AIDS-related topics. Each database search is reviewed annually. The searches in this series provide only a sampling of the most recent materials focusing on selected topics. With the exception of a few landmark pieces, only materials published in 1992 or later are included.

If you are interested in locating additional HIV/AIDS information, we invite you to contact the Clearinghouse for a customized search of the Educational Materials Database or one of the other Clearinghouse databases. Reference Specialists are available to help you plan a search strategy.

CDC National AIDS Clearinghouse

The CDC National AIDS Clearinghouse is the nation's reference, referral, and distribution service for HIV/AIDS-related information. The Clearinghouse collects, organizes, and disseminates materials and information on HIV infection to people and organizations working in the field of HIV/AIDS. All of the Clearinghouse's services are designated to facilitate sharing of information and resources on education and prevention services, published materials, research findings, and trends among Clearinghouse users.

To accomplish its mission, the Clearinghouse offers a number of specialized services including:

- Comprehensive reference and referral services
- Access to databases
- Electronic bulletin board (CDC NAC ONLINE)
- Fax on demand service (NAC FAX)
- Publications distribution
- Business and Labor Resource Service (BLRS)
- AIDS Clinical Trials Information Service (ACTIS)
- HIV/AIDS Treatment Information Service (ATIS)
- Internet services

Clearinghouse staff serve a diverse network of people who work in HIV/AIDS in international, national, state, and local settings.

Other Databases

Resources and Services Database (RDIR) has descriptions of more than 19,000 organizations that provide HIV and AIDS prevention, education, and social services. Included are public health departments, community-based organizations, hospitals, clinics, religious organizations, and professional associations.

Funding Database (CFND) includes private and government funding opportunities for community-based and HIV/AIDS service organizations. Included are details about eligibility requirements, application processes, and deadlines.

Comprehensive School Health Education Database (CSHD) is produced by the Division of Adolescent and School Health of CDC's National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion. Included in the database is information on resources to help educate children and young adults about HIV and AIDS.

AIDS Daily Summary Database (NEWS) consists of abstracts of HIV/AIDS-related articles from major newspapers, wire services, medical journals, and news magazines.

Conference Database (CONF) describes international, national, state, and local HIV/AIDS-related meetings, seminars, and workshops.

CDC Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) Database includes all HIV/AIDS-related articles issued in the MMWR series.

Periodicals Database (CPER) contains bibliographic information for HIV/AIDS-related newsletters and journals.

Federal Information Database (INFO) includes Federal press releases and statements on HIV/AIDS.

How To Get Copies Of Materials

To order copies of the materials listed in this search, please contact the organization or individual listed under the Availability section of each item. The Clearinghouse provides copies of only those materials listed as available from the CDC NAC (see order form, last page). Journal articles can be found in your local university or medical library.

Photocopies of single copies of selected items are also available through our Document Delivery Service for a small handling charge. The Document Delivery Service is important for users who want to obtain copies of materials that are no longer available from their original distributor and for users who would like to see a photocopy of an item available through another distributor before ordering copies. To help you identify these materials, a special note has been included in the availability section of the record of each item, as shown below:

Book Chapter

TITLE: A Note on Lesbians and AIDS.

AUTHOR: Califia, P.
SOURCE: In: Sapphisty: The Book of Lesbian Sexuality.
YEAR: 1988.
AUDIENCE: Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This book chapter discusses the risks that lesbians face from HIV. While statistics from the Centers from Disease Control and Prevention indicate that few lesbians contract HIV, the chapter warns that they need to be aware of modes of HIV transmission and how they could potentially affect the lesbian community. It recommends safer sexual conduct, including use of condoms or spermicides, and dental dams, and not sharing sex toys. IV-needle sharing is discouraged; lesbians who feel they are at risk are recommended to take the HIV-antibody test, especially if considering pregnancy. It also points out the risk of HIV transmission lesbians face from semen donors. The book chapter warns that AIDS phobia and the resulting discrimination affects the lesbian community as well as the general population. TITLE: Lesbian Health: What Are the Issues?

AUTHOR: Stern, P.N.; editor.

PRODUCER: Taylor & Francis, Publishers.

YEAR: 1993.
AUDIENCE: Mental Health Professionals. Researchers. Social Workers. Physicians.
ABSTRACT: This book examines issues related to lesbian health care. The 12 articles, a series of scientific investigations, target issues of disclosure, custody, and appropriate lesbian health care. The first paper reviews the literature on lesbian health care from 1970 to 1990. The next two articles address sexual identity change or coming out, and the impact of stereotyping on acceptance of lesbians within society. A series of reports emphasize health care service concerns, such as reasons lesbians fail to seek traditional health care and ways health care professionals could improve the quality of health care for lesbians. The book highlights information on lesbians and alcohol abuse, compares lifestyles of lesbians and heterosexual women, and discusses childbearing and custody questions.

TITLE: Women, AIDS, and Activism.
AUTHOR: Banzhaf, M.; Chris, C.; Christensen, K.
PRODUCER: AIDS Coalition To Unleash Power, New York, Women and AIDS Book Group.
YEAR: 1990.
LANGUAGE: English. Spanish.
AUDIENCE: Health Professionals. Planners. Researchers. Community Service, Professionals. Advocates. Women. Community, Human Service, Providers. Government Agencies. Organizations.
ABSTRACT: This book uses essays written by different women to demonstrate the authors' perspective that too little attention and research is focused on how HIV/AIDS affects women. The book demands the realignment of research priorities, identification of women's treatment issues, modification of the health-care system, and the breakdown of all barriers to fighting HIV infection. Specific topics addressed in this book include epidemiology of AIDS among women, heterosexual transmission, safer sexual conduct, unique aspects of HIV infection in women, the HIV-antibody test and related legal issues, and treatment programs and clinical trials. A section of the book contains articles dealing with racial and ethnic issues associated with AIDS. Other authors discuss AIDS and lesbians, injection drug use among women, the impact of AIDS on adolescent females, and correctional issues. Issues unique to women involve pregnancy and perinatal transmission of HIV, the effect of AIDS on reproductive rights, and HIV transmission among sex workers. A group of eight articles examines ways in which women can translate these and other issues into AIDS-related political activism. (This material contains sexually explicit language and/or pictorials that may offend some readers/viewers.)

TITLE: Woman to Woman: Sexually Transmitted Diseases; A Guide to Prevention, Detection & Treatment.

PRODUCER: Whitman-Walker Clinic, AIDS Program.

YEAR: 1995.

AUDIENCE: Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This brochure discusses the transmission, prevention, and detection of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs). The focus of the pamphlet is lesbians and the special risks involved in woman- to-woman sexual relations. A table summarizes the symptoms, transmission, treatment, and potential problems associated with an extensive list of bacterial, viral, and other sexually transmitted diseases. The pamphlet explains how to practice safer lesbian sexual relations, and emphasizes the importance of prompt detection and treatment of STDs. (This material contains sexually explicit language and/or pictorials that may offend some readers/viewers.)

TITLE: Reducing Our Risks, Women Who Have Sex With Women: Women and AIDS; No. 5.

PRODUCER: AIDS Vancouver.

SERIES: Women and AIDS; No. 5.

YEAR: 1994.

AUDIENCE: Lesbians. Women. Bisexuals.

ABSTRACT: This brochure reports the results of a survey conducted to identify key issues about HIV for lesbians and bisexual women. The results indicate that an overwhelming majority do not use latex barriers or gloves. Of the women who had vaginal sex with men over the preceding 5 years, only 30 percent used a condom. A small portion of the women shared needles. After data analysis, the authors recommend that HIV/AIDS education messages for lesbians and bisexual women should be nonjudgmental and should not focus exclusively on oral sex. The pamphlet also provides risk-reduction strategies, including instructions for creating a latex barrier from an unlubricated condom.

TITLE: Lesbians HIV & Safer Sex: Low Risk Isn't No Risk.

EDITION: 2nd Edition.

PRODUCER: Health Education Authority.

YEAR: 1992.

AUDIENCE: Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This brochure addresses the risk of HIV transmission among lesbians. It warns lesbians that safer sexual practices must be followed, but dispels the myth of casual contact transmission. The brochure notes that injecting drugs and sharing needles are common means of HIV transmission, but also warns about the dangers of artificial insemination with infected sperm. It says that any blood-to-blood contact among lesbians can result in HIV infection. Any woman who thinks she may have been at risk is urged to see her physician and consider the HIV-antibody test. Guidelines are given for safer lesbian sex. The brochure concludes with a list of HIV services available in the London area. TITLE: Lesbians and AIDS.

PRODUCER: Women and AIDS Project. AIDS Calgary Awareness Association.
YEAR: 1991.
AUDIENCE: Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This brochure addresses the subject of lesbians and AIDS. It says that because lesbians are perceived to be at low risk for HIV infection, little information has been provided about the subject. The brochure discusses ways in which lesbians become infected with HIV, examining the possibility of transmission during lesbian intercourse. It looks at the relative safety of sex toys and artificial insemination, and includes advice on condom use and safer sex.

EDITION: Revised, October 1990.

AUTHOR: Dobko, T; Mitchell, J.; Farkas, C.

PRODUCER: AIDS Committee of Toronto.

YEAR: 1990.

AUDIENCE: Women.

ABSTRACT: This brochure gives advice about the connections between AIDS, sexual behavior, and drug abuse. It explains routes of HIV transmission and categorizes sexual behaviors as very risky, lower risk, and totally safe. Methods of cleaning shared injection needles with water and bleach are listed. The brochure gives symptoms of AIDS, explains the HIV-antibody test, and looks at the connection between lesbians and AIDS. How to use condoms and ways to safely share sex toys are explained. Readers are assured that it is safe to donate blood, but are warned of the risks involved in having children and in receiving sperm through artificial insemination. Information Packages

TITLE: Provider Packet on Adolescent HIV/AIDS Medical Management.
PRODUCER: Albert Einstein College of Medicine, Montefiore Medical Center, Department of Pediatrics, Adolescent AIDS Program.
YEAR: 1995.
AUDIENCE: Health Professionals.
ABSTRACT: This information package provides information about the medical management of adolescents with HIV infection. The articles cover the epidemiology of adolescent infection, HIV-antibody testing, medical treatment, clinical trials, psychosocial issues, sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), and risk assessment and reduction. Specific issues addressed include condom use, males who have sex with males, lesbian youth, heterosexual females, runaway and homeless youth, and sexual abuse. Substance use, hemophilia and blood transfusions, and congenitally infected adolescents are also discussed. A health risk questionnaire is detailed, which provides information on sexual history, sexual behaviors, and drug use behaviors. An order form for a book aimed at the adolescent reader, which candidly discusses these issues, is included.

TITLE: I Don't Know Any Lesbians With AIDS...

PRODUCER: Gay Men's Health Crisis, Lesbian AIDS Project.

YEAR: 1993.

LANGUAGE: English. Spanish.

AUDIENCE: Hispanics. Lesbians. Women.

ABSTRACT: This information packet provides facts about HIV/AIDS and emphasizes the need for safer sex practices among lesbians. The first section discusses the Lesbian AIDS Project, created as an education and outreach arm. It includes a woman's sex survey designed to assess sexual histories and practices. A list of critical questions and demands generated at the 1992 International AIDS Conference includes calls for more studies in the following areas: lesbian sexual practices, relationships, and rates of HIV; effective barrier methods for women; and the relationship between vaginal fluids and HIV. The second section of the packet focuses on the lesbian exclusion from HIV/AIDS education, and the denial that exists about HIV and safer sex practices within the lesbian population itself. It points out that lesbians are generally identified as a low-risk population despite high-risk factors such as oral sex, sex with men, artificial insemination, homelessness, and drug use. Two articles examine the pattern of increased HIV risk among women injection drug users (IDUs) who have sex with other women. They indicate a shortage of data on this issue, a lack of drug programs targeted to lesbians, and a bias against them in many existing programs. One section of the packet highlights health issues related to HIV in women, including human papilloma virus (HPV), cervical cancer, and under representation in clinical trials. The final section explores lesbian sexuality and sex practices. Several articles in the packet examine concerns about HIV specifically from the viewpoint of African American lesbians or bisexual women. Some of the articles are followed by a Spanish version. The packet concludes with an extensive bibliography on lesbians and AIDS. (This material contains sexually explicit language and/or pictorials that may offend some readers/viewers.)

ABSTRACT: The invisibility of lesbian risk for HIV is the main focus of this information package. According to the editors, denial and fear continue to dominate the discussion of HIV transmission among lesbians. The materials include a lesbian sex survey, questions and demands determined at the first meeting of Lesbian, Bisexual Women at the VIII International AIDS Conference in Amsterdam, and various newsletter and journal reprints. They speak to the issues of lesbian risk of HIV, HIV risk among women injecting drug users (IDUs) who have sex with women, the risk of cervical cancer among women with human papilloma virus (HPV), and societal impediments to HIV/AIDS and safer sex education for lesbians. Two articles describing goals and activities of the Gay Men's Health Crisis' Lesbian AIDS Project are provided in both Spanish and English.

AUDIENCE: Hispanics. Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This article assesses the risks of contracting HIV in the lesbian population. A statistical analysis shows minimal risk in strictly lesbian relationships, and reveals that presumably the majority of individuals belonging to this group who have contracted the disease have done so by exchanging needles, through blood transfusions, or through sexual relationships with men. The article nevertheless encourages the lesbian community to practice safer sexual behaviors, and provides a list of explicit sexual high-risk behaviors which should be avoided. YEAR: 1993.

AUDIENCE: Social Workers. Educators.

ABSTRACT: This article focuses on issues facing gay, lesbian, and bisexual youth. The article asserts that such youths are the invisible minority. Already dealing with the difficult period of adolescence, they must live in an anti-homosexual culture, which can create rejection, isolation, verbal harassment, and physical violence at home, in school, and in religious institutions. The article reports that research findings show gay and lesbian youth suffering disproportionately from alcohol and other drug use, depression, suicide, and sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV/AIDS. The author urges educators and counselors to become knowledgeable about all aspects of sexuality and to demonstrate a willingness to discuss it with the following attitudes: acceptance, sensitivity, openness, support, and honesty.

 ABSTRACT: This journal article addresses the neglect of gay, lesbian, and bisexual adolescents in current health education programs, proposing a comprehensive health education model for HIV prevention within this population. It recommends that current health education efforts be augmented by broader self and group empowerment training that would develop self-esteem, social skills, support networks, and access to risk reduction materials. The author states that an integrated system of care involving school-based programs, multi-service youth agencies, and self-help groups would be in a position to deliver appropriate educational, mental health, medical, and social support services. It concludes that such a care system would present gay, lesbian, and bisexual youth with their best chance to reduce their risk of HIV infection and develop into emotionally health individuals.

TITLE: Women Usually Take Care of Their Girlfriends: Bisexuality and HIV Risk Among Female Intravenous Drug Users.
AUTHOR: Magura, S.; O'Day, J.; Rosenblum, A.
PRODUCER: Journal of Drug Issues, Incorporated.
SOURCE: In: The Journal of Drug Issues; Vol. 22, No. 1, Winter 1992.
YEAR: 1992.
ABSTRACT: This article discusses a random sample of 39 female injection drug users (IDUs) in which 38 percent disclosed recent homosexual behavior. The women were interviewed in prison, but their homosexual relationships were formed and occurred primarily outside of prison. The women who disclosed homosexual behavior, reportedly of recent onset for most of them, usually did not label themselves as gay or lesbian. The authors suggest bisexuality as best describing the women's sexual histories. The bisexual women were more likely to share needles than the heterosexual women, placing themselves at high risk for HIV. Their sexual partners were usually other IDUs. No precautions were taken to prevent possible female-to-female sexual HIV transmission. Proposed reasons for failure to take precautions against AIDS include feelings of safety in often serially monogamous homosexual relationships, or fatalism about HIV infection.

Proceedings

TITLE: Lesbians and STD Transmission; the 16th National Lesbian & Gay Health Conference & 12th Annual AIDS/HIV Forum, New York, NY, June 21-26, 1994.
PRODUCER: National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.
YEAR: 1994.
AUDIENCE: Health Professionals. Nurses. Physicians. Lesbians. Women. Women With HIV/AIDS.

ABSTRACT: This is a recording of a conference seminar discussing woman-to-woman transmission of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), and exploding the myth that lesbians are not at risk for STDs, including HIV. The speaker, a lesbian-sensitive gynecologist, presents the results of a survey that indicate that all STDs can be found in the lesbian population, including human papilloma virus (HPV), herpes, and chlamydia. She proceeds to discuss each STD individually, addressing symptoms, occurrence, and treatment. Even lesbians who have not reported any incidence of heterosexual sex reported incidences of chlamydia. Chlamydia resides deep in the vagina, near the cervix. Cases of chlamydia indicate that transmission is occurring through hand/vaginal routes, or through the use of sex toys. The speaker examines yeast infections in detail, informing her audience that Candida normally resides in the human intestine, and can be transmitted through anal/oral/genital contact. Lesbians are also at great risk for cervical cancer if they do not receive routine PAP tests, and many cases of cervical cancer in lesbians can be traced to sexual abuse they experienced during childhood. The speaker emphasizes that health care professionals must be sensitive to STDs in lesbians, and they must ask the right questions to obtain a detailed sexual history. Sexual behaviors are varied and can be described in many different ways, and it is important to tailor the message to the audience.

PRODUCER: Child Welfare League of America.
YEAR: 1991.
AUDIENCE: Social Workers. Community Service, Professionals. Advocates. Volunteer Organizations.

ABSTRACT: These proceedings are from a colloquium convened by the Child Welfare League of America from a group of agency-based practitioners and managers, academicians, and representatives of national organizations. They met to analyze ways to better serve the high-risk population of gay and lesbian youth. This colloquium's purpose was to obtain recommendations which would produce more effective and responsive services by the League's members. The document contains recommendations for policy, products, and activities that would advance child welfare practice for this group. It begins with an overview of the challenge to servicing this traditionally underserved group. For example, agencies cannot always identify the lesbian and gay youths in their care. The colloquium summarized what is known about gay and lesbian youth, including information on the initial acknowledgment of their sexual orientation during the confusing period of adolescent development. This is followed by an overview of issues the League's residential treatment agency encounters in the care of gay and lesbian youth. The report concludes with administrative policy recommendations, child welfare practice recommendations, advocacy recommendations, a colloquium roster, and selected readings.

PRODUCER: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

YEAR: 1996.

AUDIENCE: Researchers. Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This report summarizes a meeting on HIV-risk issues among women who have sex with women (WSWs), hosted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the risk of HIV transmission among WSWs, the factors and conditions that affect the HIV epidemic in lesbian populations, and whether a need exists for HIV-prevention guidelines for WSWs. The report includes the minutes, schedule, and list of participants for the April 1995 meeting. It also presents an outline of recommendations developed by participants for consideration by CDC and other health agencies, summarized under four major headings: research, surveillance, communications / publications, and meetings.

TITLE: Health Care Needs of Gay Men and Lesbians in the U.S.

PRODUCER: American Medical Association, Council on Scientific Affairs.

YEAR: 1994.

AUDIENCE: Health Professionals. Planners.

ABSTRACT: This report updates a 1981 edition, recommending modification of existing American Medical Association policy regarding the health care needs of gay men and lesbians. The report sets forth recommendations for taking a sexual history with homosexual and bisexual patients, the diagnostic and therapeutic considerations for gay men and lesbians, mental health issues, issues involving adolescents and homosexuality and access to health care by gay men and lesbians, and recommendations on how to best meet the health needs of these persons. The physician's failure to ascertain sexual orientation and sexual behavior, and the subsequent assumption that the patient is heterosexual, may deter the patient from openly confiding in the physician and may contribute to overlooked risk factors. The physician's nonjudgmental recognition of sexual orientation and behavior enhances ability to render optimal patient care in health as well as in illness. Because unprotected sexual activity between persons of any sexual orientation can result in the transmission of pathogens, recognition and proper treatment is essential for prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases. This document contains an overview of the diagnostic and therapeutic considerations; readers are referred to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) for comprehensive guidelines.

SERIES: SIECUS Reprint Series; no. 3.

YEAR: 1992.

AUDIENCE: Health Professionals. Educators. Administrators. Families. Women. Persons With AIDS. HIV Positive Persons. Caregivers.

ABSTRACT: This report is a compilation of HIV/AIDS articles that have appeared in the bimonthly journal, SEICUS Report, between October 1990 and January 1992. It addresses issues of concern for educators, public policymakers, women, people living with HIV/AIDS (PLWAs) and their caregivers, health care professionals, and families. This report includes articles about the increasing extent and impact of heterosexual transmission of HIV, PLWAs as effective HIV/AIDS educators, and overcoming homophobia in HIV/AIDS education. It targets articles on women and HIV/AIDS, focusing on how women become personally at-risk for HIV and AIDS; needed changes in public policy to provide for the needs of women with HIV/AIDS; HIV-antibody testing; lesbians, Latinas, and African American black women and HIV/AIDS; cultural barriers to HIV/AIDS information dissemination for Latinas; and an HIV prevention knowledge test for teenagers. The report addresses the behavioral component of HIV/AIDS education, describes two personal accounts of the impact of HIV/AIDS on family life, and outlines plans for implementing condom availability in New York City schools.

AUTHOR: Bybee, D.

PRODUCER: Michigan Organization for Human Rights. Michigan Department of Public Health .

YEAR: 1990.

AUDIENCE: Researchers. Social Workers. Educators.

ABSTRACT: This report summarizes results that are relevant to AIDS from a Michigan survey on lesbian health. It explains the methodology of the survey as well as characteristics of the sample group. The report looks at Knowledge, Attitudes, Behaviors and Beliefs (KABB) about AIDS, then puts AIDS issues in context with other lesbian health issues. Report recommendations include the following: educating health-care providers about the needs and concerns of lesbians; maintaining a list of lesbian and pro-lesbian health care workers in Michigan; supporting universal access to health care; reducing inequities in the present system until universal access is achieved; removing barriers to lesbian adoption; working toward enactment of viable power of attorney legislation; working to stop sexual and physical abuse of women and children; utilizing existing lesbian networks to disseminate health information; and supporting preventive health interventions which address lesbians' health needs.

PRODUCER: Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States .

SOURCE: In: SIECUS Report; Vol. 22, No. 1.

YEAR: 1993.

AUDIENCE: Researchers. Social Workers. Physicians.

ABSTRACT: This special issue of a journal discusses HIV/AIDS issues relating to women. The first article explores the identity politics of biomedical research, citing the lack of medical knowledge about the female body and the exclusion of women from research and clinical trials. A follow-up article argues that the Food and Drug Administration's 1993 directive mandating that women be included in clinical trials falls short of ensuring that women will be participants in most trials. Another article promotes a harm reduction model in sexual and reproductive counseling for HIV-positive clients. In harm reduction, the health provider sets aside all judgments in order to meet clients at their own level regarding a problem, assumes clients have logical reasons for their goals, assists them with technical information, and strives to limit the amount of harm that may occur in the attainment of the goals. One author points out obstacles to research concerning women who engage in sexual behaviors with other women. She argues that such research is urgently needed due to high rates of HIV in this population, and faults lesbian disenfranchisement and avoidance of the issue by researchers, journals, and institutions. A fact sheet presents information on latex condoms, including the female condom. The report concludes with an annotated bibliography of HIV/AIDS resources.

TITLE: Women and HIV/AIDS: The Silent Epidemic? — Special Issue.

AUTHOR: Osborn, J.E.

PRODUCER: Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States .

SOURCE: In: SIECUS Report; Vol. 19, No. 2, December 1990/January 1991.

YEAR: 1990.

AUDIENCE: Educators. Administrators.

ABSTRACT: This special issue of a journal focuses on the effect that the AIDS epidemic has had on women. It opens with an adaptation of a speech given by Dr. June E. Osborn, chair of the National Commission on AIDS, which paints a general overview of the topic. Subsequent articles address public policy toward women with HIV disease, why women wait to take the HIV-antibody test, cultural barriers toward providing care and services to African American and Latina women, and the exclusion of lesbians from treatment and education.

Teaching Guide

TITLE: Wet, Wild & Well: A Workshop for the Lesbian Community on Sexuality, Safer Sex and Communication; Facilitator's Guide.

AUTHOR: Fey, E.; Zurn, A.; Brady, R.

PRODUCER: Whitman-Walker Clinic, Lesbian Services. Whitman-Walker Clinic, Operation HEART.

YEAR: 1991.

AUDIENCE: Educators. Lesbians.

ABSTRACT: This teaching guide gives instructions on how to present the "Wet, Wild, & Well" safer sex workshop to lesbian women. It says that few attempts have been made to address lesbians' risk factors for AIDS, and that this workshop can help correct that situation. The teaching guide includes facilitators' notes, suggestions for workshop preparation, a timeline, and the 14 exercises of the curriculum. Each exercise includes an objective, materials, methods, and notes. (This material contains sexually explicit language and/or pictorials that may offend some readers/viewers.)

Videorecording

TITLE: Another Love Story: Women & AIDS.

PRODUCER: Isis Productions.

YEAR: 1990.

AUDIENCE: Lesbians. Women.

ABSTRACT: This videorecording uses the story of two young lesbian women to make its point that AIDS can affect anyone. One of the young women has not been feeling well, and her doctor suggests that she be tested for HIV. Her lover reacts with anger, fear, and denial, until a friend explains to her that anyone can become infected with HIV and that no one deserves to have AIDS. The young women visit a counselor to obtain information about AIDS and safer sex; the video ends with their decision to practice safer sex. (This material contains sexually explicit language and/or pictorials that may offend some readers/viewers.)
